We should be ready to step up to the plate

On Thursday, October 15, 2009 at 7:00 p.m. on the South Island of New Zealand in the city of Christchurch a special prayer meeting will take place. Men and women from all over the world will gather together to pray for a blessing on the proceedings of the Seventh Assembly or meeting of the International Conference of Reformed Churches (henceforth ICRC). On the next day, Friday, October 16 at 9:00 a.m. the conference will open. It is scheduled to last for five working days and to conclude on Thursday, October 22.

Now some of our readers may be wondering, "What sort of conference is this?" Thereafter others questions may surface as well: "What will be discussed there? Which churches will be present? What benefits does it produce? How often does it meet? What does it cost?"

Background

Before attempting to answer these questions and others, a little history lesson may be in order. The actual beginnings of the ICRC can be traced back to the previous century. In 1980 an invitation went out from the Reformed Churches in The Netherlands (Lib) to Presbyterian and Reformed churches in Australia, Canada, Ireland, Korea, Scotland, and South Africa to come together in Groningen, The Netherlands from October 26 to November 4, 1982. The aim was to create a new international body which would bring together confessional Reformed churches from around the world.

Initially this invitation received lukewarm response from us. The Committee on Relations with Churches Abroad (CRCA) recommended to Synod Smithville 1980 that we only send observers and that the next synod make a decision about membership. Synod Smithville, however, decided on a more proactive approach and delegated two ministers (namely the Revs. M. van Beveren and J. Visscher) to represent the interests of the Canadian Reformed Churches and to participate fully in the formation of this new international conference. As a result of this involvement, the Canadian Reformed Churches belong to the charter or founding members of the ICRC.

After the organizational assembly was held in Groningen, the inaugural meeting of the ICRC took place in Edinburgh, Scotland in 1985. Subsequent gatherings have been held in Langley (Canada) 1989, Zwolle (The Netherlands) 1993, Seoul (Korea) 1997, Philadelphia (the United States) 2001, and Pretoria (South Africa) 2005. Now it is on to Christchurch, New Zealand 2009 where the churches of the Conference will come together for the seventh time.

Members

Who will be present? Many but not all of the names will sound familiar to the readers of this magazine. From North America, we have the Associated Reformed, the Canadian Reformed, the Free Reformed, the Orthodox Presbyterian, the Reformed Churches, the Reformed Presbyterian, and the United Reformed Churches. Reformed Churches of New Zealand, and the Reformed Presbyterian Church of North East India.

In addition to these member churches, eight other churches from around the world have requested to be received as members. Perhaps the names that are best known to us include our sister churches in South America, the Reformed Churches of Brazil and a neighbouring church in North America, namely the Heritage Reformed Congregations.

It should also be mentioned that a number of other churches are sending observers to the gathering. Many of these observers will be coming from churches that have connections to churches that are already members of the ICRC.

Missing

When it comes to members, there are some names that we might expect to see on the list but who are absent. Two churches in particular come to mind. The first name missing is that of our sister churches in Australia, the Free Reformed Churches. Although they participated in the Constituent Assembly in 1982 and were present at the meetings of 1985 and 1989, they subsequently decided to withdraw due to the fact that their ICRC membership was causing a great deal of internal dissension. Needless to say, it is regrettable that they are not present and actively involved in the affairs of the Conference as they have much to contribute.

Another name not on the list is that of the Presbyterian Church in America (PCA). Recently the Canadian Reformed Churches joined the North American Presbyterian and Reformed Council (NAPARC) and the largest member in that organization is the PCA. It too is in a position to make a major contribution to the Conference as it is known worldwide as a very active missionary church. Perhaps the other member churches of NAPARC can practice some gentle persuasion on the PCA.

Agenda

What would a conference of any kind be without speeches? The ICRC is no different and has chosen as theme for the 2009 meeting: "The Vitality of the Reformed Faith." Rev. G.W. Knight III will speak on "Facing the Challenge of the Charismatic Movement." Prof. Dr. Nelson Kloosterman will speak on "Facing the Challenge of Individualism in Church Life." The Rev. Frank van Dalen will speak on "Facing the Challenge from Islam." Dr. Mohan Chacko will speak on "Facing the Challenge of the Asian Context." Each of these speeches will in turn be extensively discussed and hopefully supply much food for thought, as well as wise direction for the member churches.

In addition to speeches, the agenda includes numerous reports and workshops. A constitutional amendment will be debated and voted upon. Membership requests will be processed. In short, the talks will be many and the days will be long.

The Canadian Reformed delegation

Synod Smithers 2007 instructed the CRCA to send a full delegation consisting of two voting delegates and two advisors to New Zealand. At the first meetings of the Conference our churches regularly sent a full delegation; however, at the last number of meetings the delegation was cut back. This was done partly for cost reasons and partly because we made use of the Corresponding Secretary and the Treasurer, both of whom were from our churches. Thus the Rev. M. van Beveren in the past and currently the Rev. C. VanSpronsen (Secretary) have often been asked to assist the Canadian Reformed delegation. In addition, Mr. H.A. Berends (Treasurer) has been asked to do the same.

Upon reviewing this practice it was discovered that this approach did not work well. The two brothers mentioned above always have a great deal of work to do when the Conference is in session and thus cannot be at the beck and call of our delegates. Synod Smithers 2007 took due note of this and hence the mandate of the CRCA. The Committee in turn decided to send Br. H. Hoogstra and the Rev. Dr. J. Visscher as voting delegates and the Rev. R. Schouten and Dr. J. Vanderstoep as advisors.

Work

But what have they been sent to do? Is it all about doing a little work and then about sleeping in, hobnobbing, and sightseeing? The reality is that it is all about meetings, meetings, and more meetings. In addition to the plenary and advisory committee meetings that have been organized by the Conference, there will also be a host of other meetings. The CRCA has instructed the designated brothers to meet with their counterparts from around the world: Brazil, Indonesia, Korea, The Netherlands, Scotland, South Africa, and the USA. No doubt other unexpected meetings will also take place. Indeed, here is one of the real advantages of the ICRC. It allows a delegation to make one trip and to have contact with many brothers from all over the world.

In summary then a gathering such as this is very useful for renewing old ties, making new contacts, hearing about each other's struggles, receiving calls for help, and making connections between churches. In addition, this international meeting also serves as an incentive to host more local and regional meetings of neighbouring members. Over the past years regional meetings of ICRC churches have been held in Asia, Africa, and Europe. It is to be hoped that the North American members will follow suit soon, perhaps in conjunction with NAPARC, building more bridges to one another and addressing issues of common concern.

Beneficial?

Still, while all that has been mentioned thus far may be interesting, the question that some of you will be asking is this: "In what way does the ICRC benefit our churches? Is the time devoted to this Conference and the money spent on it truly profitable and worthwhile?" In other words, when it comes to organizations of this nature we are quick to ask the question, "What's in it for us?"

But is this the right question? A better question would be, "In what way is our membership beneficial to other churches?" As we look at the worldwide ecclesiastical scene in general and at the Reformed scene in particular, it does not take too long before one comes to the conclusion that, while we may be small, we have been richly blessed by the Lord.

Only, blessings never come without responsibilities. When we see how so many Reformed churches around the world exist and struggle in countries filled with poverty, sickness, and violence, we need to offer a helping hand. In addition, when we see them asking for instruction, seeking guidance, and needing encouragement, we should be ready to step up to the plate.

I would hope and pray that as churches we have enough Christian compassion in us and enough catholic vision as well to realize that our membership in the ICRC is not about "what can we gain?" but rather "what can we contribute?" The fact of the matter is that in our contributing, giving, and sharing with others there are not just blessings for them but blessings for us as well.

May the Lord our God see fit to bless the Seventh Assembly of the International Conference of Reformed Churches.

Reformation involves Transformation

MATTHEW 13:52

“Do not conform any longer to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind.”
Romans 12:2a

Sometimes we need to look at our own culture through the eyes of others to learn to question what we do. When you are on a mission field, it's easy to tell converts to Christianity to break with heathen customs. But what about us in North America? What would a convert from a mission field think of how we sometimes uncritically adopt certain customs in our culture?

For many people nowadays, the end of October is memorable because of Halloween. Masks and costumes are prominent items in all sorts of stores. Many regard Halloween simply as a “fun time” for children. But what is the background of various masks and decorations featuring skulls, corpses, witches, and demons? Why at this time of year are so many people fascinated by the occult?

There are connections between Halloween and an ancient pagan Celtic festival called “Samhain” (pronounced “sah-wen”). It took place at the end of the harvest season on October 31, when people believed that the barrier between the dead and living was lifted. The dead could come among the living and damage the crops or cause diseases. People tried to ward off evil spirits with fires or to appease them with sacrifices. There were also those who tried to capitalize on the presence of such spirits for their own purposes.

As Christianity took root in various countries, questions arose as to what to do about various heathen customs and festivals. Should such things be banned, or should efforts be made to replace them or Christianize them? In the eighth century, the church attempted to supplant the pagan festival of Samhain by the celebration of “All Saints’ Day,” also known as “All Hallows’ Day” on November 1. It was meant to commemorate the deaths of martyrs. On the evening before this, there was the vigil of “Hallowmas of All Saint’s Day.” That is where the present name “Halloween” comes in.

Instead of the heathen festival being eliminated, what happened was that many elements continued to compete with the Christian elements that the church had tried to introduce as a replacement. Now the original character of Halloween is becoming more and more prominent again. Because many people have turned their backs on the Christian faith, there is a growing fascination with what is demonic and occult.

Undoubtedly, both the heathen festival and the association with “All Saint’s Day” on November 1 were reasons why Protestants after the Reformation rejected the celebration of Halloween. In North America, the Pilgrim fathers and people after them maintained this rejection. It wasn’t until after the famine of 1846 in Ireland that immigrants from that country brought this celebration with them to our continent.

The Lord explicitly warns his people to stay clear of the heathen practices of the Canaanites (Deut 18:9-12). These practices included sorcery, witchcraft, the casting of spells, and other occult phenomena. Nowadays there is a sharp increase in these practices, coming to a climax on Halloween.

The world continues to try to suck believers into its mold. But Romans 12:2 calls us to resist this and to be transformed by the renewing of our minds. When our minds are renewed, we learn to distinguish between what is worth maintaining and what should be rejected. Scripture warns against the powerful influences of heathendom, reminding us that there is no fellowship between light and darkness (2 Cor 6:14). “Touch no unclean thing, and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:17b).

Instead of conforming to the worldly pattern of celebrating Halloween, how much better it is to focus on the transforming power of the Word of God! At this time of year, let us especially remember God’s great gift in granting a Reformation to the church, a return to his Word and the doctrine of salvation by grace. Once again, his people learned to put on the God-given spiritual armour and struggle against Satan and his army of evil spirits.

Let us continue to treasure God's Word and praise Him for the continuation of his work throughout the centuries from the Reformation onwards. Because of his grace, there are still Reformed churches in the world that confess the sovereignty of God and uphold the authority of his Word. We may rejoice in this together and pass on the spiritual riches given to us. "Hold on to what you have, so that no one will take your crown" (Rev 3:11).

A Heart Aflame with Zeal

(Part 2 of 2)

In May of 1567, two Reformed pastors languished in a prison cell in Valenciennes (present-day Belgium). One was Pérégrin de la Grange, the other Guido de Brès, the author of our Belgic Confession. Despite the awful conditions, de Brès was able to write a number of letters. Last time, I began sharing the letter to his mother. It continues:

Besides, he comforts me without ceasing in my struggles; he is a prisoner here with me. I recognize Jesus Christ my master. I see Him, as it were, enshackled in my irons and chains. With the eyes of my spirit I see Him locked up in my dark and gloomy prison. He promised me in his trustworthy Word to be with me to the end of my life. He says that when the least of his disciples is taken prisoner that that is He, Himself, saying "I was a prisoner and you visited me." He says to Saul, "Saul, Saul, why do you persecute me?" when Saul was persecuting the poor believers. But Christ says that it is He that is attacked. He said through his prophet Zechariah, "Whoever harms you harms the apple of my eye." What is more precious and more carefully guarded than the eye? And behold my Lord who says that the trials and afflictions which happen to me are done to the apple of his eye. O what a Master, what a Saviour my God has allowed me to find! Do you find many masters who speak thus of their servants? I don't believe so.

He is here with me with a multitude of angels, comforting and strengthening me and causing the words of his mouth to fall as a sweet melody upon my ears. He is saying to me, "I will give to those who overcome to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of my God. I know your tribulation and your poverty, but you are rich. You are blaspheming, you who claim to be Jews and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan. Do not fear the things which you have to suffer. Indeed, the devil is about to throw some of you into prison." Then He says to me, "Be faithful unto death, and I will give you the crown of life." O what comfort! My heart leaps within me when these words sound in my ears. It is not a liar or a deceiver who speaks thus, but it is the Son of God, the mouth without deceit, the infallible truth.

Being thus comforted, strengthened, and prepared by the divine consolation, I struggle in my chains, believing myself to be a thousand times happier to have a part and communion in the sufferings and afflictions of Christ, knowing that I am not suffering for having done wrong or having extorted anyone. I have procured the salvation of all men; as much as it was in me, I have announced peace to everyone. And I do not suffer for anything else except for having preached Jesus Christ crucified for the salvation of men. And as witness to that, I call on the consciences of those who hold me shackled here as a criminal. I resolve to suffer for Christ, for the truth, for justice. I do so in the light of what St. Peter says about how the Spirit of the glory of Christ rests on me. I am contented. I am filled up with blessings. I am in need of nothing, since the Lord has filled me with blessing.

What shall I say then? God has allowed me to see the kingdom of his Son flourish in the land of my birth. Now that He calls me to rest, I can indeed heartily say with the old man Simeon, holding Christ as a newborn in my arms, "Now, Creator, let your servant depart, according to your promise." I am content to leave this mortal life to enter the rest of my God.

Well then, my dear mother, when you see me thus well prepared and cheerful, be content, and rejoice with me at the honour which God gives you. God gave you a son who preached his Word, although you intended to ask for one who would preach human doctrines. And as the crosses and persecutions easily accompany the Word of God, I am sharing in them. Do not find this strange, for whoever wishes to live faithfully in Jesus Christ will suffer persecution, just as St. Paul witnesses to everyone in 1 Timothy 3. Then be content.

God has allowed you to see all of your children married and you have seen their offspring. You have lived to a good age, and according to the course of nature, you will not have long to live after me. I am going on before and you will follow after me after you have lived out your days. One should not dwell on the sufferings of this present life or spend too much time contemplating them. All that only brings tears to the eyes and shakes up people. But it should be remembered that all of this passes quickly and the joy which follows afterwards will be eternal and permanent. And the persecutors are only heaping up for themselves the wrath of God which shall ruin and overcome them at the end. Don't you see that one generation passes and another comes? Thus everything passes lightly as the wind and the smoke; it is nothing that has any durability. The one dies today and the other tomorrow. The one dies one way and the other another. There is no happiness in this unstable and fickle age, except for those who build on the firm foundation which is Jesus Christ.

Put before your eyes the example of that virtuous mother mentioned in chapter 7 of the second book of Maccabees. She saw seven of her sons martyred in one day. She saw them die a very cruel death, the tongue cut out, the arms and legs cut off, then being roasted in a kettle over the fire. She saw the pitiful sight before her eyes and she showed a truly courageous heart, comforting and strengthening her children so that they could endure death for the Law of God. And when the youngest showed signs of being stirred by the promises of the tyrant, she again encouraged him to suffer and to go the way of his brothers, telling him that he was giving his life and his body for the Law of God, and that he would be raised up in the resurrection.

That reminds me of reading in church history about the great persecutions. There was this time when the poor Christians were gathered outside of some city to hear the Word of God. There was a certain governor who had been sent to put to death these poor faithful ones. Now as this governor was on his way to execute his wicked commission, word came to the ears of a faithful and true Christian woman. She ran quickly with her baby in her arms to join the gathering. Now as she came to the soldiers of the tyrants, she pushed her way through. The governor saw her hurrying and asked her where she was going in such haste. She promptly responded that she was going to join the gathering of Christians. He said to her, "Haven't you understood the charge and the commission which was given to me to put all these people to death?" She responded, "Yes, I have and that is why I am hurrying, so that I may be so fortunate as to suffer with the others." Then he asked her, "And what will you do with this little child?" "I am taking him with me," she said, "that he may also share in the crown of martyrs with the others." The tyrant was broken-hearted at the words of this woman and returned to his master without executing his task. Behold, that was definitely a heart marvellously aflame with zeal for the love of God – it was a heart worthy to be held up as an example for all women.

It reminds me again of another mother and her son at the time when Romain was martyred. When he was asked to adore some images, he said loudly and clearly in a public place that he adored only one God through Jesus Christ his Son and that this doctrine was so certain and true, that if they would ask a young child of seven years who was not preoccupied with any particular affection, he would say this same thing. So they took a small child of about seven years age and Romain asked him saying, "Come here, my son. Should we worship many gods, or should we worship God through Jesus Christ?" The child answered him, "Among us small children, we know that there is only one God." Then the tyrant sent for the mother, and whipped the little child in the presence of his mother. The child asked for a drink from his mother. She responded to him, "Alas, my child, I have nothing from which to give you a drink. But go my son, drink from the cup of martyrs with the little children which Herod put to death." Then the child was beheaded.

Such examples are worthy to be held before your eyes and all faithful mothers so that they will not resemble the mother of the sons of Zebedee. She presented her two sons to Christ, but it was so that they might be great before the world. "I would, Lord," she said, "that my two sons should be seated, the one at your right and the other at your left in your kingdom." Now she meant an earthly kingdom. But Jesus Christ said, referring to the cross, "Can you drink of the cup which I must drink?" In so saying, He was showing that to enter into his kingdom, the cross and sufferings serve as steps, just as Christ suffered and then entered into glory. Through many tribulations we must enter the kingdom of heaven.

And now, my good mother, I beg you to show yourself as a virtuous woman in your afflictions and bear patiently and joyfully this trial that God has sent you, knowing that it is the good will of God against which no one can resist, even if He would. Live the rest of your days in the fear of God, remembering me, and how I served my God till death.

I commend to you always my poor wife and my little children so long as you live in this world. They are losing their father in their tender youth. I pray the Lord my God with all my heart that He will be their compassionate and merciful Father, and that He will give them his Holy Spirit in their childhood, and cause them to walk in his fear all the days of their life. I ask Him without ceasing to give me this blessing and that He would also bless my poor widow and show his favour to her always. I am glad that she has gone with the children to Sedan – this is to me a little solace and peace of mind. And when she is far away from you and my brothers, I beg you all not to forget her, but take care of her along with the little ones.

I pray the Lord my God that He will fill you with all his graces and heavenly blessings, confirm you in all good things, until He receives you in his blessed kingdom with all his true children. I commend you to God and to the Word of his grace, which is powerful to strengthen you and gives an inheritance among all the saints. Farewell, my mother, farewell, my good mother. May the Lord comfort you in your tribulation.

May 19, 1567. By your son, who loves you dearly, Guy de Brès, prisoner and ensnaked for Jesus Christ the Son of God.

Concluding thoughts

A lot could be said about what de Brès writes in this last part of the letter. Let me just mention a couple of points. In Article 6 of the Belgic Confession, de Brès affirmed that the "church may read and take instruction from" the apocryphal books. In this letter he mentions what may be learned from 2 Maccabees 7. Interestingly, de Brès mentions the apocryphal books quite a number of times in his other writings.

His use of 2 Maccabees is historical and that ties into the second point, which is his deep awareness of church history. To comfort his mother, he was able to appeal not only to the Scriptures, but also to what God had done in times past with other martyrs. The events that he mentions seem to be rather obscure – at least, I have not been able to track them down. But that probably says more about our impoverishment when it comes to church history than it does about de Brès. He knew the church fathers and the early history of the church in a way that puts many twenty-first century pastors to shame.

Some day we will have an opportunity to meet de Brès in person. I for one am looking forward to it. Here was a man who grew up Roman Catholic but eventually was gripped by God and his grace in Jesus Christ. He was so gripped that he was willing and able to give up his life on a scaffold on May 31, 1567. What a testimony to God's mercy and power! No praise for man here, only for God. That's who de Brès would want us to glorify.

Note:

The text of the letter is found in Procedures tenues a l'endroit de ceux la religion du pais bas (Geneva: Jean Crespin, 1568), 367-388. There is an English translation available (Procedures Held With Regard To Those of the Religion of the Netherlands), but it is of poor quality. I have worked with that translation, correcting and improving from the original where necessary.

Reading Calvin

Eric D. Bristley is associate pastor of the Covenant Reformed Church, Grass Valley, CA

The Calvin 500 has brought a new harvest of books by and about Calvin. Though the Calvin lover relishes this feast, others may feel lost. After you blow out the five hundred candles, where should you begin? What are some of Calvin's key writings and what are the best books to read about him? Here is a brief guide for getting started.

Calvin was an extremely prolific writer. His Latin writings fill fifty-nine large volumes in the collection Corpus Reformatorum. Many of these have been translated into English and some have gone through numerous editions. But the Institutes and his commentaries are only a portion of Calvin's work. He penned hundreds of sermons, letters, and treatises.

To keep from being overwhelmed, one might begin by reading Calvin in small doses. 365 Days with Calvin, edited by Joel R. Beeke (2008), provides selected readings from his sermons and commentaries. Calvin's Wisdom: An Anthology Arranged Alphabetically (1992), provides us with select quotations. Devotional books tap into the marrow of Calvin's spirituality such as Heart Aflame: Daily Readings from Calvin on the Psalms (1999), or Thine Is My Heart (2006). An older volume by Dillenberger, John Calvin: Selections from His Writings (1971) provides a nice anthology.

The Institutes

If you have not done so already, read Calvin's magnum opus – a theological feast – which, if you take it all in, is guaranteed to make you a Calvinist. This renowned work is one of the classics of the Christian church and the best statement of Reformed theology. It consists of four divisions: I. The knowledge of God the Creator, II. The knowledge of God the Redeemer in Christ, III. The mode of obtaining the grace of Christ, and IV. The external means or helps by which God allures us into fellowship with Christ, and keeps us in it.

Four Latin editions were published during Calvin's lifetime with the definitive edition issued in 1559. In English we are privileged to have not one, but four translations. First translated by Thomas Norton (1561), then by John Allen (1813) and again by Henry Beveridge (1845-46). A critical modern edition was given to us by Ford L. Battles (1960). Battles' is the scholarly edition while the Beveridge, the most common, can be obtained inexpensively in one-volume (2008, Hendrickson). The first edition (1536) is also available in a Battles translation (1995), and we even have a English rendering of the 1541 French edition (2009).

Numerous attempts have been made to abridge this work with varying success, but it is best to read it intact. For those needing a reading companion, A Theological Guide to Calvin's Institutes edited by David Hall and Peter Lillback (2008) or Battles' Analysis of the Institutes (1980) may fit the bill. But there is one little gem that will help the newbie. A reprint of an old work by R.C. Reed, The Gospel as Taught by Calvin (2009), gets to the heart of Calvin's theology. You might also peruse Robert Reymond's John Calvin: His Life and Influence (2004), J.H. Merele d'Aubigne, Let Christ be Magnified: Calvin's Teaching for Today (2007), or John Piper's John Calvin and His Passion for the Majesty of God (2008).

A plethora of recent Reformed authors unpack Calvin's message in John Calvin: A Heart for Devotion, Doctrine, and Doxology (2008). Joel Beeke's book Living for God's Glory: an Introduction to Calvinism (2008), provides a comprehensive survey of how the Reformer's thought can influence every area of our lives.

Biographies and letters

To investigate the man himself, pick one of these biographical studies. Beza's sketch was first and begins volume one of Calvin's Tracts and Treatises. The best short bio is Thea Van Halsema's This Was John Calvin (1959), which is also excellent for younger readers. Specially designed for children is the sixty-three page offering by Simonetta Carr (2008). For the ladies, we commend the novel Idelette (1963), wife of John, written by Edna Gerstner, wife of John. Three small works merit attention: Jean Cadier's The Man God Mastered (1960), E. Stickelberger's John Calvin (1931), and T.H.L. Parker's Portrait of Calvin (1954). A new study by Robert Godfrey, John Calvin: Pilgrim and Pastor (2009), gives insight into Calvin's life and teaching. A different tack is taken by M. van den Berk, who writes portraits of those near to Calvin in Friends of Calvin (2009).

A new release already receiving resounding acclaim is John Calvin: A Pilgrim's Life (2009), written by church history professor Herman Selderhuis. Paul Helm calls it a "blast of fresh air" among Calvin biographies.

Earlier works that reflect varying degrees of appreciation and liberal bias are T.H.L. Parker's standard work, John Calvin: A Biography (1975) and William J. Bouwisma's John Calvin: A Sixteenth-Century Portrait (1988). Among the older works in the German Reformed tradition is a translation of Paul Henry's two volumes, Life and Times of Calvin (1849). If you read French, Emile Doumergue's monumental seven-volume John Calvin, The Man and His Times (1899-1927) will probably never be surpassed.

We can get up close and personal with our reformer if we take the time to study his letters, such as the small paperback, The Letters of John Calvin (1980, Banner of Truth). Advisor of princes and nobles, counselor of pastors and theologians, comforter of distressed believers, Calvin demonstrates his skill as a pastor of pastors, his insight into people, and his zeal for the kingdom of Christ. About 4,000 letters were collected in the Brunswick edition. About 600 of these were published in English (1855-57). Banner of Truth has released a nicely bound set, which includes these, in Tracts and Letters of John Calvin (2009).

Sermons and commentaries

No one will fully value Calvin if they have not read his expositions of Scripture. Calvin was eminently a preacher of the Word of God. Two studies by T.H.L. Parker on Calvin's Old and New Testament Commentaries (1986) make this abundantly clear. His work on Calvin's Preaching (1992) is complemented by a recent study from the pen of Steven J. Lawson, The Expository Genius of John Calvin (2007). Herman Selderhuis has given us another study, Calvin's Theology of the Psalms (2007), which explores the heart of his God-centeredness.

Many of Calvin's sermons have been reprinted in facsimile form or in updated English. Banner of Truth is to be commended for providing us with his sermons on Ephesians (1973), Second Samuel (1992), Galatians (1996), Songs of the Nativity (2008, Luke 1-2), Acts of the Apostles (2008), facsimiles of Timothy and Titus (1983), Deuteronomy (1987), and Job (1993). A different set of sermons on Job (1952) includes a succinct essay on Calvin's preaching by Harold Dekker. Other collections include Sermons on the Deity of Christ (1950), Isaiah 53 (1956), The Ten Commandments (1980), Micah (2003), and the Beatitudes (2006). We are indebted to the band of Calvin translators for all they've made available to English readers.

Calvin is reckoned "among the best interpreters of Scripture since the Apostles left the earth" (Bishop Hall) and considered the greatest exegete of the Reformation. His commentaries cover the larger part of the Old Testament and the whole of the New Testament (except Revelation). Older English translations of Calvin's commentaries kept in print by Baker, were first produced by the Calvin Translation Society (Edinburgh, 1843-1855). In the 1960s Eerdmans linked up with Scottish publisher Oliver and Boyd to release a new version of the New Testament Commentaries, edited by David and Thomas Torrance, devotees of Karl Barth. Under the editorship of Douglas Kelly and others, similar work on Calvin's Old Testament Commentaries was begun in the 1990s. An updated version of selected commentaries on various Old and New Testament books is the part of the Crossway Classic Commentaries, edited by Alister McGrath and J.I. Packer.

Theological and polemical treatises

If you are now ready to dig deeper into Calvin and mine the gems of his profound theology, you will want to obtain the seven-volume set mentioned above, Tracts and Letters of John Calvin (2009, Banner of Truth). This set is a perfect addition to your library of Calvin's commentaries. In its pages you will find Reply to Letter by Cardinal Sadoletto (1539); Against Pighius (1543, on free will); An Inventory of Relics (1543, a satire); The Necessity of Reforming the Church (1544); Acts of the Council of Trent with the Antidote (1547); Treatise on Scandals (1552, on Protestant divisions); Defense of the Faith Concerning the Sacraments in Answer to Joachim Westphal (1555, against radical Lutheranism).

Calvin's catechetical writings may be his own best introduction to his thought. His Instruction in Faith (1537) was translated by Paul T. Fuhrmann (1949), while Calvin's first Catechism is treated by I. John Hesselink (1997). Another small outline of the Christian faith, written by Calvin when he was twenty-nine, is called Truth For All Times (1998). A reliable translation of The Eternal Predestination of God and A Defence of the Secret Providence of God by Henry Cole appeared under the clever title, Calvin's Calvinism (1856, 1987). A lesser known work entitled The Bondage and Liberation of the Will: A Defense of the Orthodox Doctrine of Human Choice against Pighius was written by Calvin in 1543 (1996). Concerning Scandals received a facelift in the 1978 edition by John W. Fraser and Benjamin Farley translated Treatises Against The Anabaptists And Against The Libertines (1982).

If you have followed us to this point, you will have some idea where to start in taking your first taste of Calvin or, if you are a seasoned Calvin reader, what new offerings to enjoy in this memorial year.

Canticles

This canticle, a versification of Revelation 11:15-18, was set to the tune of Psalm 2 of the Genevan Psalter. The themes are so similar, the tune readily suggested itself.

The Kingdom

Revelation 11:15-18

Genevan 2

Strasbourg, 1539/Lyons, 1548

1. The kingdom of the world has now become the kingdom of our Lord and His Anointed.
Our God will reign forever without end.
The cath'lic church fell to the ground and wor-shipped.
She said, "We give You thanks, Lord God Almighty,
the One who was and evermore shall be.
For You have taken all of Your great power and have begun to reign eternally.

2. "The nations were enraged against You, Lord.
Your wrath then burned against them very fiercely.
The time has come for judging all the dead and for rewarding all who served you tru-ly.
You will acknowledge all Your faithful prophets –
Your saints, both small and great who fear Your name.
Those who destroy the earth will face destruction,
but you will save us and exalt Your fame."

Reformed Bible College: Lectures on Idolatry throughout Scripture

On May 12, an opening lecture was delivered by Rev. Ken Kok to about twenty-five people in the Abbotsford Canadian Reformed Church building. Under the direction of the Reformed Bible College in the Fraser Valley, Rev. Kok embarked on a series of lectures, in which he unpacked the theme of idolatry through Scripture. He began by explaining that man is, by nature, a worshipping creature. As G.K. Chesterton observed, "When we cease to worship God, we don't worship nothing; we worship anything." Idolatry is the most comprehensive explanation of unbelief, because either we worship the God who has revealed Himself in his Word, or we worship a god of our own making. A better knowledge of Yahweh as He has revealed Himself leads to a clearer understanding of whom and how we worship. During this introductory first lecture, our speaker introduced the general topic to us. One issue he dealt with, for example, relates a curious paradox about idolatry: are idols real, or are they imaginary? Of course, he assured us, idols are both real and purely fictional.

During the second session two days later in the Willoughby Heights Canadian Reformed Church, Rev. Kok provided a historical overview of idolatry. Beginning with the beginning was important to our speaker, so he first provided an excursus on the Bible and the Ancient Near East. The first chapters of Scripture provide not only a clear account of world history, but also reveal so many patterns of structure and thought that have much to do with worshipping the Creator rather than worshipping the created. In the beginning, God formed and filled this earth. Then He assigned man, as his image-bearer, to continue that forming and filling task. Before long, man had rebelled against being that image-bearer, and this resulted in death, destruction, and, by the beginning of the second book of the Bible, slavery and servitude of God's chosen people.

The third lecture, on May 19, continued with the theme of idolatry, beginning with the Exodus, and carrying on with Israel's journey through the wilderness and beyond. The speaker made it abundantly clear that the golden calf of Exodus 32 was by no means an isolated event as far as idolatry is concerned; it was simply another clear example.

Idolatry again became repeatedly evident later in Israel's history, not just with Jeroboam's golden calves, but the prophets made continued references to the similarities between the idolatry/adultery of the entire nation.

God's punishment against idolatry, through the exiles, became clear during our fourth session together. How can God's people keep themselves from idolatry? Rev. Kok presented worship as the biblical answer. He quickly resurveyed the Old Testament, this time demonstrating how God had instituted worship, especially in the tabernacle and temple, as the way to ensure that God's children keep themselves from idols. He then went on to the gospels and demonstrated how Jesus is the true tabernacle/temple. Jesus is the God-given answer to idolatry, as we find in Hebrews 1:3: "And he is the radiance of his glory and the exact representation of his nature, and upholds all things by the word of his power. When he had made purification of sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high."

The Apostle Paul's interactions with the theme of idolatry were the focus of the fifth lecture. Dealing with material from both the letter of Acts and then also from the Pauline epistles, Rev. Kok demonstrated that idolatry was again a central theme that Paul had to deal with. For example, when Paul describes unregenerate man in Romans 1, the bottom line is that man "exchanged the truth of God for a lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed forever." Ultimately, all sin is idolatry, because all sin involves worshiping and serving the created rather than the Creator.

The last lecture, delivered on May 28, was used to tie many threads together. The last book of Scriptures, Revelation, demonstrates how the idols are defeated; they are thrown down and defeated. Yet God's people continually need instruction about the need to stay away from idols, because of our tendency to worship the creature rather than the Creator.

The lecture series, attended by twenty to thirty people each evening, gave evidence of a speaker who has a vast knowledge and understanding of Scriptures. The feedback given by participants was very positive; this lecture series had certainly led to an increased appreciation of the depth of Scriptures. As we learned more, we all realized how much more there was yet to learn.

Farewell to Rev. Moesker

Six years ago the congregation in Vernon were eagerly awaiting the arrival of our new minister and family in February of 2003. Finally the day came and Rev. Moesker, his wife Christina, and their four children, Marsha, John, Julia, and James, moved to Vernon. We were so thankful to our Heavenly Father for once again providing us with a shepherd, pastor, and teacher.

Rev. Moesker was a gift to us as a congregation, as Sunday after Sunday we were comforted, encouraged, and admonished with the truth in the preaching of God's Word. During this time we went through many different experiences together as minister and congregation. By going through these times our personal relationships grew closer and, most importantly, our relationship grew closer to the Lord.

Farewell sermon

On July 12, 2009 we heard Rev. Moesker's last sermon as God's faithful servant here in Vernon. His text was 1 Thessalonians 5:1-11 with the theme: "Living for the future. We need to be self-controlled, armoured, and edifying." We were encouraged to look into the future; looking forward to the Lord's return is the real meaning of the past and the present. We need to be busy with God's Word and prepare for Christ's coming. In this last sermon Rev. Moesker encouraged the congregation to put on the armour of hope, faith, and love. We were encouraged to keep up our devotions and faithfully attend the worship services. We have no idea when Christ will return and we do not need to know. Instead, we need to always look ahead and live towards the goal of Christ's return; on that day we will see each other once again in the New Jerusalem.

When the sermon was over, we sang praise to God with "Come Lord Jesus Maranatha." As minister and as congregation we look forward eagerly to the Lord's return and we know that this is the real meaning of our past and present life.

Farewell evening

In connection to Rev. Moesker and his family moving to Owen Sound, a potluck dinner and a farewell evening took place on July 18. We all had a wonderful time together with Rev. Moesker and his family.

The farewell evening was opened with prayer and then various members gave speeches. The seniors in our church appreciated and expressed their thanks for the times that Rev. Moesker and Christina gave to them when they needed visits and encouragement. In the letter from the council, we heard how Rev. Moesker was a very hard worker in all areas involving his task as our minister and pastor. It was noted that the catechism students thoroughly enjoyed going to catechism classes. Thanks were also expressed to Christina for being a very supportive wife of Rev. Moesker, as she went on many visits to members in the congregation with her husband. It was also noted that she took care of him when she felt he needed to have some relief from his duties and would ensure that he had the needed time to rest.

Both our retired minister, Rev. C. VanSpronsen, and Rev. J. Reaves from the United Reformed Church in Kelowna expressed their thanks to Rev. Moesker for being a faithful servant of God and for his valued friendship. Rev. Moesker was told that the congregation could easily have sat under his preaching here in Vernon well into his own retirement years. Rev. VanSpronsen assured everyone that Vernon was a wonderful place to retire, as it is such a beautiful area to live. Everyone was told that Rev. Moesker was the glove that fit the hand; this could only mean that Rev. Moesker was the right man for the task here in Vernon.

A letter was read from the church in Yarrow, in which they expressed their best wishes to the Moesker family as they move to their new home in Owen Sound. There were humorous stories and a song that involved everyone's participation. We also enjoyed a power point presentation, in which there were photos of different events that took place over the past six and a half years.

Marsha's Friendship Society also gave a speech expressing their thanks to Rev. Moesker for his work. A photo album was given to Rev. Moesker, Christina, and Marsha, full of pictures and stories about the life here in Vernon with Marsha and her caregivers. The caregivers also expressed their thanks to Rev. Moesker and shared the fact that Marsha was loved by all and will be dearly missed. Marsha, too, has been a blessing to the entire congregation.

The Moesker family was given gifts from the council and congregation in appreciation for all of the work done. It is the congregation's prayer that the Moeskens will soon feel at home in their new home in Owen Sound. And we do hope that they will often come to visit us here in Vernon.

A letter of greetings was sent to Classis Central US, since the deputies were unable to attend several classes due to prior commitments and the long distance. Classis decided that if a deputy is not available to attend, at their recommendation someone else could be mandated to represent the churches of Classis Manitoba at such an assembly.

The description of the role of the deputies for contact with neighbouring classes/presbyteries as formulated in several other articles of the Regulations was also fine-tuned.

Out of consideration for our older readers, many of whom do not have computers or Internet access, Clarion has decided to keep on printing Press Releases. We do ask the writers of these Press Releases, however, to give some thought as to how they write them. Please keep them brief and informative.
